Frequently Asked Questions

If I participate in one program, can I apply for the other program later?

Logically one could apply for the Signature Program after LOYAL, but not vice versa. Signature Program participants are expected to have the skills LOYAL teaches. We have had LOYAL graduates apply for and be accepted to the Signature Program.

If I'm turned down for one program, can I apply for the other?

Yes. We may sometimes even encourage an applicant to apply for the other program if he or she seems better suited for that one.

Am I too old or too young?

Leadership Oklahoma City's Signature Program does not have an upper age limit. We do ask that applicants be at least 21. LOYAL applicants must be between 23 and 35. Signature Program applicants (and class members) have ranged from early twenties to seventies, but those in their twenties are often up against more experienced community leaders and are somewhat less likely to be admitted to the Signature Program without a substantial leadership background.

How can I convince my employer one of these programs is worth the time away from work?

You'll know more about the community, more about how to work with others, and more people, many more people. Tell your employer that over 600 local businesses have had participants. Many organizations have repeated participation, with an applicant every year. Some organizations so value the Leadership Oklahoma City experience that they hold internal mini-selections of their own to narrow the number of candidates from their company in order to field the strongest possible applicant. Many companies pay all or part of the tuition for their employees, and it is very unusual for class members not to be granted no-penalty time off for the program. Program participants receive many hours of locally-based training at a fraction of the cost of most professional seminars. In addition to the knowledge they gain, participants also meet dozens of community contacts and leaders who become part of their personal and business networks. The Leadership Oklahoma City office can refer your employer to an industry leader who encourages class participation among his or her employees.

What happens after the program is completed?

Leadership Oklahoma City has an active alumni program. Graduates can continue to expand their community information-gathering and their network. For a small annual alumni association membership fee, graduates are invited to sessions on critical community issues, political forums, new challenges or emerging opportunities and social events. The Alumni Association usually holds an event about once a month, so there are many chances for continuing education.
